Re: Summary of History Regarding Buzz Telecom, Inc. and UMCC.

Ms. Anderson,

This is the summary of the activities that transpired between Qwest Communications Corporation ("Qwest"), and Buzz Telecom, Inc. ("Buzz") and Ultimate Medium Communications Corporation ("UMCC") that you requested.

Buzz was a reseller of Qwest Communication Corporation's ("Qwest") long distance services. On November 20, 2006, Qwest sent Buzz a notice advising that it would temporarily suspend services if past due amounts were not paid. In late November, early December of 2006, Qwest disconnected Buzz for nonpayment.

On November 30, 2006, a Qwest employee sent an e-mail to Buzz CEO Kurtis Kintzel, asking him if he would be interested in selling his base of customers. On December 5, 2006, this employee provided Kurtis Kintzel a list of the ANIs (account numbers) that had been on his account through e-mail, asking him to try to get them moved as soon as possible.

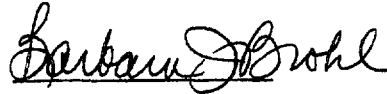

This employee then gave Kurtis Kintzel (Buzz CEO) and Scott Wilson (UMCC CEO) each others' contact information. At that time, UMCC was another reseller of Qwest long distance service.

Qwest did not migrate customers from Buzz to UMCC. In fact, in a Rule Nisi proceeding against Buzz in Georgia, Scott Wilson testified that he had migrated the ANIs to his account. On December 4, 2006 and December 5, 2006, UMCC submitted 3 batch files, containing ANI and customer information, to Qwest's Remote Control electronic interface portal, to migrate those customers to UMCC's account. Qwest's only interaction with those transactions was simply to process the orders.

On April 18, 2007, the Georgia Public Service Commission ("GA PSC") issued a Cease and Desist Order to UMCC requiring them to stop providing services to and billing customers in Georgia because it was not certificated in the state. The GA PSC copied Qwest, advising Qwest that it could not provide service to an uncertificated reseller in Georgia.

Qwest sent UMCC a notice of temporary suspension (which is essentially temporary disconnection) on April 23, 2007 advising that it was going to disconnect UMCC's services after midnight on April 30, 2007 as a result of a Cease and Desist order from the GA PSC. On April 30, 2007, UMCC's Georgia services were disconnected. On May 10, 2007, in response to issues raised by other commissions, Qwest sent UMCC another notice advising that disconnection would occur for the remainder of UMCC's services after midnight on May 14, 2007. After that time, all of UMCC's services that had been provided by Qwest were disconnected.

Sincerely,
